Ambitious Politicians Disappointed.

Some disappointed aspirants for a place on the ticket have expressed disapproval of the methods of the Colbyites in naming delegates. They say it savors too much of the machine method. No polittical movement can be conducted in its detail work in a manner to please everybody. Organization is as essential to the success of the Colby movement as it is to that of every other political movement, and there must be leaders in the organization, and much must be left to the discretion and judgment of the leaders. In the work of planning a campaign it necessarily follows that many who are anxious to get in the glare of a convention lime-light are doomed to disappointment.
